MANY VARIETIES OF GOOD ROSES—

Growing in the Nursery are many varieties of good Roses that are not known generally to the public. These varieties are often used to substitute for Roses that are sold out at the time of ordering and prove themselves to be extremely satisfying to the planter.

Unless it is stated not to do so, I substitute for varieties that are out of stock, and in their place I give good reliable Roses that I consider will give every satisfaction.

When selection is left with me, I give the best kinds from the stock available at the time the order is received.

Prices for 1941

It is my endeavour to give as much attention to the growing of good plants, with such care in the packing and despatch as will assure good results to follow. That is my part, and the utmost I can do. My prices are governed by this policy.

There are no better plants offered for sale and I give value.

IF A ROSE IS WORTH PLANTING IT IS ALSO WORTH GOOD TREATMENT.

Nourish your Freshly Planted Roses.

Mix with the soil in which you are going to place your Rose tree some kind of plant food other than that which is natural to the soil. It is quite safe to assume that in 95 cases out of 100 the soil in which a Rose tree is to be planted is not rich enough in plant nutriment to at all do justice to the subject to be set therein.

It is essential, for the assurance of sturdy, healthy growth, to mix some manure with the soil. Safe manures are as follow: Cow manure, well decayed stable manure, blood and bone fertilizer. In conjunction with these manures, a slight dusting of superphosphate can sometimes be used to advantage. Sulphate of potash, used sparingly, is also a very useful constituent in the soil to promote health and vigour in the plant, and has a strong tendency to reduce mildew attacks.

SAFE PROPORTIONS OF MANURES to MIX with the soil—

SUPERPHOSPHATE—1 oz. to CUBIC foot of soil.

BLOOD AND BONE—2 ozs. to CUBIC foot of soil.

SULPHATE OF POTASH— $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. to CUBIC foot of soil.

Please note CUBIC foot NOT Square foot surface measurement. The manures must be thoroughly MIXED with EVERY PART of soil. Now for well decayed stable manure or cow manure a coating of which may be spread on the surface of the soil of 2 inches in depth and can be dug in, in such a manner, as to insure thorough mixing with the soil.

There is no advantage in mixing manure with the soil of a greater depth than 8 inches. So when figuring out the proportions from the above tables for artificial manures you will find that for eight inches depth of soil from the surface just two thirds the amount would be required for one square foot surface measurement.

Some soils are greatly benefited by a good dressing of lime, but due care must be taken in not spreading it at the same time with other manures, as it destroys in part the right chemical action. Three or four weeks should elapse, either before or after other manures are spread, before or after giving a lime dressing; and another point well worth taking note of is that lime should always be spread on the surface of the soil where it works down in its own action.

Manures, if possible, could be mixed with the soil two or three weeks before planting time. Mix the manures with the soil that will come in direct contact with the roots. This allows young roots to derive the benefit of the nourishment immediately. When manures such as the above are thoroughly mixed with the soil, it does not do any injury to the young roots, and, in fact, is just that which is required.

Yes, it is safe to mix the manure with the soil and plant your Rose tree at the same time. Do the mixing thoroughly. Often—too often—I have seen indifferent results from freshly planted Roses, either because the ground has not been manured at all, or the manure has been placed too far away, or, again, buried too deep. The plant, having poor soil in direct contact with the roots, has not been able to thrive well enough to send the roots the distance to reach the plant food. In the case of no manure in poor soil it is, sadly, plant starvation.

On NO ACCOUNT let anybody lead you to believe that you can plant a Rose in poor soil without any manure for the first year and expect at the same time to have good results.

PLEASE carefully read all of the above as I want you to have GOOD results—

G. L. COLE.

Abbreviations Used for Classification of Roses

(H.P.) Hybrid Perpetual, (H.T.) Hybrid Tea, (T.) Tea, (Per.) Pernetiana, (Wich.) Wichuraiana, (H.G.) Hybrid Gigantea.

(F.) at the end of description of variety indicates that the said Rose is fragrant.

(E.F.) exceptional fragrance.

EXH. means that the Rose referred to is full enough and has the requisite shape and form to produce at times a Rose of Exhibition standards. It does not necessarily mean that the Rose has not a highly decorative value.

DEC. means that the Rose referred to must be considered as decorative value and not one that usually produces blooms of exhibition type. Both classes of Roses are very desirable and form the several features of beauty in the Rose world.

Bush or Dwarf Roses

This form of Rose is coming greatly into favour. There are a great many varieties that do better on this class of stock than they will on the standard, and they produce abundance of flowers.

My plants are propagated from selected buds, and worked only on approved stocks. Again this season I am able to state that my plants are particularly well grown, with a splendid root system.
